The power of visuals: why we're here

Lean Finely Textured Beef (LFTB) is a beef end-product created when meat processors utilize the maximum amount of meat from an animal, using a separating process to make fattier meat more palatable. In order to ensure safety, trimmings are given a bath in ammonia before being rinsed and combined with ground chuck to make ground beef products.

Student-led protests came to a head on June 4, when government military cleared the protest by force, inflicting casualties on unarmed protesters.

Social Image Resizer Tool

Create optimized images for social media

Resize and crop your images for web use

Today there are innumerable uses for photos and images on the web. Websites need favicon and content images, people need Twitter pictures and Facebook profile banners, others want to create custom-sized photos for other uses – the need is endless.

To optimize images for web use, you likely need to resize, crop or change their file format type from the source image for their final use. To optimize your website for site speed, it is best to not resize large images on the fly, but to use properly sized images in the first place. Most images are typically smaller.

There are many big, complex image manipulation tools available for such work, but not everyone can afford to buy Photoshop or even know how to do such simple tasks in its cluttered, confusing user interface. Finding and learning how to use a big tool's favicon generator, Facebook profile picture editor, Twitter picture size editor, or even performing a simple photo crop is usually an exercise in frustration. Most people really need is a simple image editor tool for cropping and resizing photos and graphics.

Case studies

engaging difference

The world was waking up to 3D printing in a big way. And the question loomed large: Was Stratasys positioned to take advantage of the surging interest in 3D printing and affirm its industry leadership position, or would the competition strike first?

Weber Shandwick conducted an audit of competitive positioning across a variety of 3D printing companies, which revealed that no other company was telling a “what’s possible with 3D printing” story in an organized fashion. The visionary positioning was Stratasys’ to own, and a corporate storytelling campaign put the competition on its heels.

charting a new product journey

Weber Shandwick partnered with Concur to launch Concur Breeze (recently rebranded to Concur Small Business), a solution for small businesses, and gain credibility in its new space.

The team emphasized Concur’s more than 15 years in enterprise expense management to communicate the new service’s dependability and reliability with media and SMB influencers. To make the message more friendly and relatable to small business owners and employees, humorous and light-hearted videos became key to execution.

The videos focused on small businesses’ needs and pain points. The team also expanded Concur’s online community and created new advocates by activating new social media channels. This included a Concur Breeze blog involving company representatives and third-party sources, a Twitter handle and Facebook page. Posts discussed the benefits of automated expense management.

The VeriSign logo, featuring the word "VeriSign" in a serif font. The "i" in "Veri" has a small red checkmark above it. To the left of the text is a small graphic of a checkmark made of red and white pixels.

VeriSign embarked on a new strategy to narrow its lines of business, focus on its core product, and realize the value customers and consumers place in its signature “check mark” seal. Informed by research, Weber Shandwick designed and executed a thought leadership campaign positioning VeriSign as the authority on Internet Trust.

The “Cart Whisperer” campaign was an offbeat way to promote VeriSign’s “green means go” Web site validation technology and to showcase how e-commerce companies can reduce the number of “abandoned carts” from online consumers. We employed a viral video and social media and networking channels (e.g. Twitter, YouTube, and Facebook). This initiative positioned VeriSign as benign and human, building emotional bonds that reinforced brand association with Trust.

Social and mobile adoption has shifted content marketing in visual's favor.

Kick off your visual brand development, asset creation and content strategy by researching your target audience and their needs and media habits.

Utilize the free resources from the web and social networks to create more appealing content and make your content discoverable and shareable.
