Build a strong digital footprint

- Social Media Platforms
 - Regularly update and populate
 - Ensure these platforms are seen on your page 1
- Thought Leadership + Contributor Profiles
 - Get CEO and executive leadership Involved in content generation
 - Submit leadership for expert commentary and contributor profiles

Align Your Web Pages with Google's New Algorithm

Brief Background...

- 2011 – Google rolls out "Panda"
 - more significant anti-spam updates
 - one-track mind: CONTENT
 - links, anchor text, mobile friendliness don't matter
- 2016 – Officially baked into Google's core ranking algorithm
 - Panda rewards good content and penalizes content that it deems shallow or thin
 - holds value just as high - if not higher - as relevancy

The best, easiest, and safest way to rank content?

Write for your readers.

There are 4 factors to consider when creating high quality content:

TITLE

- Make it compelling
- Make it easy to read
- Ensure a variation of your target keyword is featured prominently.

Takeaway? If your title is lacking, no one is even going to make it to the content. (i.e. If it's your Celiac best friend's birthday, which are you more likely to click? "How to Make the Best Gluten-Free Chocolate Cake: An Easy Recipe" or "Gluten-Free Chocolate Cake Recipe"?)

TEXT

- Make it engaging, informative content
- Make sure variants of your keyword are featured prominently. Make sure you do so in a way that isn't obnoxious, repetitive, or disruptive to the flow.

Takeaway? Keep your focus on quality content. With keyword inclusion, remember, sometimes less is more, and going overboard will only hurt you with penalties.

LENGTH

- Aim for at least 2,200 words in length.
- There's a reason Wikipedia is the fifth most popular website. In addition to being incredibly comprehensive, most Wiki pages are a minimum of 2,000 words.
(Also encyclopedic, non-promotional, just straight facts without fluff.)

Takeaway? Stick to the 22200 rule. When you're creating your content just think, "What Would Wikipedia Do?".

VALUE

- Ask yourself these questions:
Who is your audience? Whose searches are you hoping to capture? Does your content speak to them? What are they receiving in return for clicking and spending time on your site? Will they find it so valuable they will be willing to share it with everyone who shares their interest?

Takeaway? Your content does not have to appeal to the masses the same way as a hamster eating a tiny burrito does in order to reap the benefits of going viral. So long as your content is valuable and interesting to your core audience, the shares will come.

Three things tell Google your site should rank higher than competing properties.

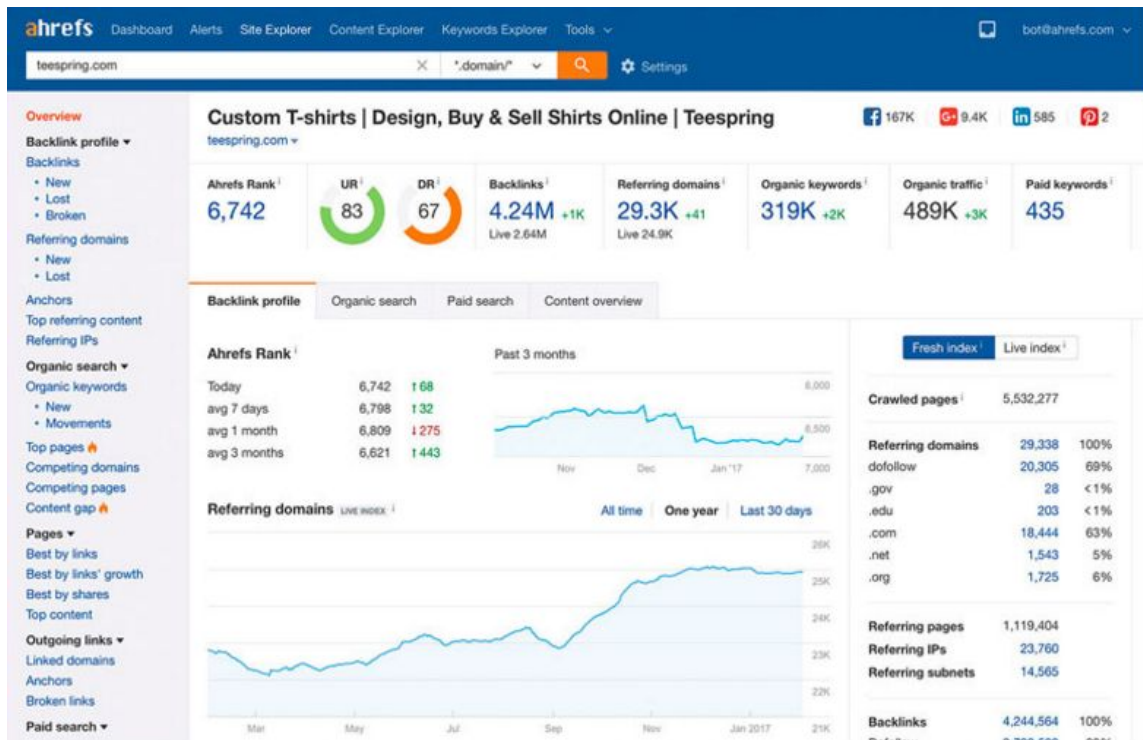

1. A compelling title and accompanying content relevant to your desired keywords are more likely to be clicked by searchers
2. An informative, engaging, article roughly 2,200 words in length, will keep searchers on your page longer, sending engagement signals to Google
3. If a reader finds content valuable, they are likely to share it with their online network. Not only are social signals a powerful force in determining where content ranks in search results, your content will also receive more clicks as a result, repeating this cycle all over again.
